

AFFAIRS OF the HEART

By Mrs. Thompson

This woman's problem is slightly different. It is not in-laws or neglectful husband, but very queer neighbors. She writes:

Dear Mrs. Thompson: Your column never touches on the problem that worries me, but I think you can help me. The problem is neighbors. It is when fortune favors them with a small amount of money, that the trouble begins. For at these times we are treated as very low, degrading people, and if social or business matters force us to go to their home, they are restless and indicate, at times, by speech, expression and movements, that they are annoyed by our presence. When their funds are low and they are forced to live like the rest of us, or they have a misunderstanding with someone, which is on the average of every four weeks, they are friendly with us, willing to be neighborly in every way except visit us. When they do call on us, they criticize our clothes and say we can not afford this or that, though they know little of our financial affairs. They also repeat, in an exulting manner, things other people have said. They go to most of the social affairs of the neighborhood, taking leading parts when they can force their assistance upon the people. When we meet at such affairs where there is a large crowd, they are usually friendly, but away from the crowd they merely tolerate us, because we are such a low class of people, though they attend gatherings I wouldn't think of attending. We've never done anything intentionally to offend them, except talk against those rough gatherings, and refuse to go ourselves, but they seem to be very sensitive. We also have feelings and it's hard to take their censure and make no reply, except in a few instances when they get too severe. Now, we think it is not only ill-mannered but shows a lack of good breeding in them and we want to know if we're right in our opinion, or are we ignorant of the true meaning of a well-bred person and a bit sensitive ourselves? MRS. X. Y. Z.

Of course, no well-bred person would behave as they do, but aren't you taking them entirely too seriously? Just think what a world of hearty laughs you could get out of them, if you could just look at it that way. Maybe you are a bit over-sensitive, but people like these are so unimportant that they really don't count at all. Don't try to

DRINKING AWAY HER HAPPINESS

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am just another unhappy wife, coming to you for motherly advice. I have been married six years and I am twenty-four years old. I have one child, a darling boy four years old. We have only been in this city two years and I don't know hardly anyone. Our home is sixteen hundred miles from here. I get so homesick and discouraged sometimes that I don't know what to do. Where my trouble is, my husband drinks every week, and he just goes the limit. I can't bear to see a drinking man. I try to talk and reason with him but he thinks he knows it all and won't listen to anything I say. He has a good position here and we could be so happy if he would stop drinking. He even tries to make me drink and go to wild parties. I left him once but he came hanging around begging me to take him back and promised to do better. But he has failed. My dear mother knows nothing of my trouble and I don't want her to as my father was a drinking man. I just can't continue this way. A HEARTBROKEN MOTHER.

Perhaps your husband's employer could rouse him to a realization of what he is doing, to you and to himself. Speak to his employer and tell him frankly of the situation. If everything fails, the only thing to do is leave him if you are to retain your self-respect. RESTLESS: You are quite right in taking that attitude. But do not neglect all social niceties. Perhaps a reading of the following books will help you acquire that new viewpoint you appear to be striving for: "Martin Eden," by Jack London; "Vagabond Journey Around the World," Harry Franck; "Plays for Puritans," George Bernard Shaw. SHELLY: You are both young. You could well wait. But about his past, that is his affair. Perhaps it has been so unhappy that he wishes to forget it all. He ought to be honorable enough to tell you if there is anything in his past that might concern you. Mrs. A. H.: Sometimes a re-washing, accompanied by pulling and stretching, is effective. One must have been of better wool than the other. ANXIOUS: A gentleman is certainly not expected to send stamps to a young woman correspondent.

Physician First Woman Member Of National Academy of Science

Dr. Florence Sabin

By Central Press

WASHINGTON.—The stamp of greatness placed on the work of Dr. Florence Sabin by the distinguished men who compose the National Academy of Science, in electing her the first woman member of the academy, follows recognition of the value of her labors by her own sex. Some months ago she was chosen by the National League of Women Voters as one of "America's Twelve Greatest Women."

Fame comes to Dr. Sabin as a result of her research work in blood cells. She is a member of the editorial board of "Anatomical Record," and is the author of a number of works on that subject. She was vice-president of the American Association of Anatomists in 1909-10.

Dr. Sabin received the degree of doctor of medicine from Johns Hopkins University in 1900, following graduation from Smith college, and has been associated with the university continuously since that time. After holding the woman's fellowship in anatomy in 1901-02 and serving as resident house officer for a year, she successfully served as assistant instructor and associate professor of anatomy. She has been professor of histology since 1917.

Except for two brief trips to Europe and a visit to China, Dr. Sabin has devoted almost her entire time to research and instruction at Hopkins. She spent two of her vacations studying in Germany. Her visit to China was in connection with the opening of the Medical School of Peking.

One of Dr. Sabin's earliest scientific writings was a treatise on the lymphatic system. This manuscript was awarded a prize of $1000 by the Association for the promotion of Research by Women, being adjudged the best contribution by a woman embodying "new observations and conclusions based upon independent laboratory research."

SURE An Australian visitor to the United States tells the following story:

An American was being shown about the bush when a herd of bullocks made its appearance. "What are those?" the American asked.

"Bullocks, of course," was the answer. "In America they are three times as big," the visitor remarked.

A flock of sheep passed, and again there was inquiry as to what they were. "Sheep, of course," the Australian replied.

"Guessed they were rabbits," quoth the American. By this time the Australian had learned something, and when three kangaroos hopped along and the American inquired what they were he replied "Grasshoppers, of course."
